What’s Love Got To Do with It?
Psychological Perspectives on Intimacy, Sex, and Close Relationships

“We humans are social beings. We come into the world as the result of others’ actions. We survive here in dependence on others. ... And most of our happiness arises in the context of our relationships with others.” — the Dalai Lama.

This series explores the many ways in which close relationships shape our daily lives and well being, and we, in turn, shape them. Come learn what psychology has to teach us about this most fundamental aspect of our humanity.

February 23, 2010
3:30 to 5:00 p.m.
“See Me, Feel Me, Heal Me: Empathy in Normal Adult Development and Neurological Disease”
Robert W. Levenson
Professor of Psychology, University of California, Berkeley

March 25, 2010
3:30 to 5:00 p.m.
“How Do I Love Thee? Emerging Biobehavioral Perspectives on Sex, Love, and Relationships over the Life Course”
Lisa M. Diamond
Associate Professor of Psychology and Gender Studies, University of Utah

April 22, 2010
3:30 to 5:00 p.m.
“Why Marriages Thrive and Falter”
Thomas N. Bradbury
Professor of Psychology, University of California, Los Angeles

For more information, please visit events.psych.missouri.edu/lecture-series/

Sponsored by generous contributions from the Grimshaw Distinguished College Lecture Series in the Humanities and Social Sciences; the Fred McKinney Psychology Lectureship; the Melvin H. & Kathleen Marx Lecture in Experimental Psychology Fund; the College of Human Environmental Sciences; the Department of Communication; the Department of Women’s and Gender Studies; the Department of Philosophy; the Department of Health Psychology, School of Health Professions; Sinclair School of Nursing; the School of Social Work; and The Graduate School PhD Completion Project.